SUPREME COURT.

Thursday, April 13th.

IN ORIGINAL JURISDICTION.

Before His Honour Sir FRANCIS POTTER (CHIEF JUSTICE).

TAT MEE HOWELL.

The action was continued in which John Tatham and Frederick Howell, chief bailiff of the Supreme Court, for an account since 24th September, 1905, of the receipts and disbursements of the defendant in respect of the plaintiff's business of a butcher and complainer carried on under the style of the Hongkong Butchery, and for a receiver.

Mr. M. W. Slade, K. C., instructed by Mr. J. H. Gardner, appeared for the plaintiff, and defendant was represented by Mr. Eldon Potter, who was instructed by Mr. C. E. H. Beavis (of Messrs. Wilkinson & Grist).

Mr. A. R. Lowe, chartered accountant, on being recalled, stated—I think Mr. Slade said he had taken out the balance himself.

Mr. Slade—I jotted them down and they were added by an accountant.

Witness—The only correct thing about them is the adding.

Mr. Slade—Oh!

His Lordship—The registry added them up. Witness—The only correct thing about them is the adding up.

His Lordship—I beg your pardon. I thought you said the only correct thing was the adding up.

Mr. Slade then questioned witness with regard to the mistakes in the accounts as taken out by Mr. Slade.

Mr. Slade—It is perfectly possible to make a mistake.

Witness—Of course it is, but it means gross carelessness.

Are these corrections mainly of outstanding accounts prior to January, 1896?—I have not looked to see that.

I want to understand where the errors come in?—In the books. That is all that interests me. There is a balance on the books at 31st January. Why did not take it out I can't explain.

I am not asking you to explain anything I did. I am asking you to explain what you did. You took out all accounts which were outstanding on the face of the books at the end of January?—Certainly.

You found that on these figures which were given to you there was a number of amounts?—Certainly.

I suggest to you that most of these are not carried forward into January at all?—I have not looked to see that. It is immaterial.

His Lordship—I don't think you can.

Mr. Slade—He seems to think that when other people make mistakes they do it on purpose.

Witness—Oh, no.

Mr. Potter—No suggestion of that by us.

His Lordship—What is the next result?

Witness—Mr. Slade seems to think it is an unfair way of taking out that amount.

Mr. Slade—What is the next result? You said there were 8400 worth of items included in that. What is the total on the face of the ledger?

Witness—$3,508.53—a difference of $110—items which I can give you here not in the ledger, sundry small items. I can give you what I should say would be a reasonable explanation if you like, or rather an assumption.

Mr. Slade—I should like to know the number of corrections you made. You said the only correct thing about them was the addition. I should like to know the number of corrections as a matter of curiosity. There are nearly 500 entries.

Witness—72 corrections.

Mr. Slade—Some of these corrections are merely corrections of folio numbers.

Witness—It is not so, my Lord.

Mr. Potter then resumed his address, pointing out that the allegations that there had been no sale and that Mr. Howell was part owner of the Hongkong Butchery had failed. Referring to a better transaction, in support of his contention, Counsel said the voucher would corroborate his statement.

Mr. Hill, the Court usher, was asked to hand up the voucher.

Mr. Slade—What is that, Mr. Hill? Has it been produced?

Mr. Hill—Yes, it has been produced.

Mr. Slade—What is it?

Mr. Hill—Account for butter.

Mr. Slade—I have not seen it. It has been produced from somewhere.

Mr. Potter—I beg your pardon.

Mr. Slade—That is the sort of thing we have to put up with here.

Mr. Potter—Mr. Howell said in evidence—

Here it is. Here is an account for sale of butter.

Mr. Slade—I beg your pardon—

His Lordship—Don't let us get tragic.

Mr. Potter—I am not tragic.

Mr. Slade—I have never seen it. It has never been produced. What Howell said was done was a duplicate account in my file. That was never produced in Court at any time.

His Lordship—I have seen this document.

Mr. Slade—I don't know how it got among your papers. It was not produced.

Mr. Potter—It was. Your Lordship looked at it.

His Lordship—It is not marked.

Mr. Potter—It was handed to your Lordship.

Mr. Slade—How could it get there without being shown to me, as it ought to be? I don't understand. You are not at liberty to put in things without letting the other side see them.

His Lordship—I can't understand why it should escape going to Mr. Slade.

Mr. Potter—It was dealt with by Mr. Howell in the box and produced by him. There is no doubt Mr. Beavis remembers the incident.

Mr. Potter then continued his address. In dealing with the assertion that Howell had undersold the business fraudulently, Counsel said that the only man who could lose by such an undersale was Howell himself. In conclusion Counsel submitted that every allegation made by plaintiff had utterly failed. The plaintiff could not ask for an account of the Hongkong Butchery because he had had one account which was proved and which showed that he was heavily indebted to Mr. Howell. He thought that plaintiff could not ask for an account of the Hongkong Butchery as it was at present, for the very good reason that Mr. Howell had no interest in that. Furthermore, Counsel submitted that each and every allegation of fraud made by the plaintiff—and they were most serious—had utterly failed. They had been disproved as conclusively as anything could be disproved by Mr. Howell and his witnesses.

Mr. Slade said they had listened at great length to much declamation, interspersed with attacks on his conduct of the case, and some ingenious arguments from his friend. But he would get down to cold facts. The problem was whether there had been a genuine sale on January 7th or 8th, 1897, by which Howell divested himself of his previous interest in the Butchery, because Howell had by that date the right to half the total net profits made by the Butchery.

Mr. Potter—And never got any.

Mr. Slade, continuing, said the problem was whether Howell had not in January, 1897, after the departure of plaintiff, entirely divested himself of that right to half share of the profits or had retained for himself secretly any interest in the Butchery as at present carried on and as carried on from that date to this, then he was liable. What was Howell's position? He was a Government servant, prohibited under the rules of the service from carrying on any business. He had stated in the box that he kept the matter quiet. Many people were aware of his connection with the Butchery, but he admitted that he did not want it to be talked about more than he could help. Apart from his relations to Tatham, he could continue to keep quiet about the Butchery, and Counsel suggested that as it was proved that Howell did in fact get rid of the business in January, 1897, on terms which left Tatham in the cold and kept himself in the warm he had very good reason for great secrecy. It was therefore difficult to prove his connection with the Butchery, and it could only be done by taking advantage of such errors of judgment as he had displayed during the course of the years from 1897 to the present day in doing things which got on record and therefore could be brought against him. It was only by the slips and errors of judgment made by the fraudulent defendant, as they submitted him to be, that the fraud was discovered.

In conclusion, Counsel submitted that the attacks which they had made on the books and the accounts based on the books had been justified up to the hilt in spite of the whitewashing applied by Mr. Lowe.

His Lordship intimated that he would give judgment later.

Later his Lordship delivered judgment. He said the case had been fought with considerable rancour, but he was not surprised at that, seeing that there were serious allegations of fraud against a public officer. His own attitude towards the case—and he was certain the defendant fully understood his attitude in the case—was that he had insisted on great particularity, on every point being thoroughly investigated. He was not quite sure whether the defendant's legal advisers had quite appreciated the situation. The case was by no means plain sailing. There were serious allegations of fraud and the only way in which the case could be appreciated was by working backwards. There was really one vital point. Had the defendant any share in the Hongkong Butchery Company—any interest whatever? If he had, the whole of the allegations were practically established. Having certain information the plaintiff could hardly franchise case in any other way. It was either fraud or nothing. Of course, the plaintiff made these allegations at his own risk. It was quite idle to push-pouch the plaintiff's case. There were points of very great importance involved in it. Perhaps—each of them was not so important as the other, but taking them collectively they were of the utmost importance. His Lordship was bound to say that every question on which the plaintiff had relied had required explanation, sometimes very complicated explanation. Sometimes the explanation given had not been altogether satisfactory. The defendant seemed to have been busy making evidence against himself. It might have been through his early connection with the Butchery and the subsequent interest which he took in what was called the Hongkong Butchery. He wanted to emphasize the fact that taken collectively the evidence on which the plaintiff had relied was excessively serious. Everything that had been admittedly done were things which the defendant would have done if he had any interest in the Butchery Company. He felt almost ashamed to say what he was going to say, that he thought in many cases in which Chinese had been involved, verdicts had gone against the man in consequence of accumulation of evidence of that sort. He wished also to say that if the case had been tried by a jury he did not think they would have agreed, and therefore he approached the case and gave his opinion with the greatest hesitation. With regard to the employment of Campbell, his Lordship said it was curious, to say the least of it. There was the explanation which Tang Kee gave that Campbell was afraid that he (Tang Kee) would have molested him in his monthly salary, as was apparently the custom among the Chinese. His own evidence, however, was perfectly clear. He said he was engaged by Mr. Howell, and he suggested that Howell should pay Campbell's salary because he had engaged him. He looked to Mr. Howell, and he did not know that Tang Kee was running the show until some time afterwards. It was a very small point, but it must be noticed. That was that Howell was often at the Butchery shop making inquiries. In connection with the fact that Howell had paid Campbell's salary regularly there was the additional fact that when he went to England he advanced Campbell $200. Then came the question of the entries in Mr. Howell's bank book relating to the Butchery Company. They were entries which were arrived at after an order made in chambers. The order was made in view of one of the letters sent to Johnson. With reference to the crossed cheques, it transpired that Howell was in the habit of exchanging Tang Kee's crossed cheques for his own. That was acceptable, because, as they knew, the Banks did not take cheques made out to Chinamen if they were crossed. It showed the particular interest which Mr. Howell displayed in the business. There was another small point which perhaps has a bearing on the case. That was the sudden increase in the credit side of Mr. Howell's bank book in 1897. An explanation was given and was accepted. Then they came to Johnson's letter. He confessed he had the greatest hesitation in forming a definite opinion on the point. The letter undoubtedly was written in connection with a definite order for four cases of butter which was sent to Johnson on the China. The cases were to be delivered on the return journey of the China. The Butchery Company had an advertisement that they had an arrival of butter at the time when the China arrived, and his Lordship could not say that the theory of the bogus letter was altogether acceptable to his mind. The suggestion was that it would enable Johnson to obtain an extra five per cent. discount. At first he understood the suggestion thrown out that it was a general letter, but he had no doubt that it was in fact a letter specially connected with that special order. The letter was written on the Butchery Company's paper and it said that "Johnson may draw on us." Then there was the bill to the Ice Company written last year. He did not think he could discard that merely because it would have been foolish to write it. If Mr. Howell had been connected with the Hongkong Butchery Company he would have written precisely what he did write and Mr. Haxton said he considered it a European Company. The bill was signed "F. Howell." With regard to the account with O'Halloran the attitude taken by Mr. Hill might have been capable of two constructions. It is possible that Hill being at that time Mr. Howell's attorney and having an interest as he would have in the Hongkong Butchery, knowing that Butchery had an account against O'Halloran, might have sent a message that if he did not pay a writ would be issued. On the other hand, it was possible that O'Halloran being a friend, he gave him, though his Lordship did not think it should have been done, friendly warning that a writ was about to be issued. With regard to the orders sent to the registry to Mr. Howell, defendant's explanation was not altogether clear. All those things required explanation, and the explanation was given in all cases quite satisfactory. The next point was the sale to Tang Kee. It was suggested that no other arrangement could have been possible, than to make the best sale, a forced sale it seemed to have been looked upon, to the first person who came along; but another arrangement was possible. His Lordship would have thought it would have been possible in the circumstances to have arranged for a small commission to have been paid. He did not know that Tang Kee would have accepted it, but at least he thought that efforts should have been made to have obtained it. The point which he thought had been overlooked was that they were selling or authorising Tang Kee to use a name which was well known at that time, which had been for two years before the European community, the name of the Hongkong Butchery. It was known to be a European shop, and it was a name in which Tatham as well as Howell had a definite interest. His Lordship did not think in the circumstances, if Tatham had had a legal adviser, that any man would have sanctioned the arrangement going through. He thought that Howell was to blame both in his own interest and in Tatham's. He thought he ignored rather the fact that Tatham had a definite interest in the name, that the name was going to be used, as it was in fact used a few days afterwards, by the Chinaman who bought it. Tang Kee himself told the Court that he had his eye on the business. He saw it was falling and he thought he could make a good business of it. If a little care had been devoted to investigating the whole thing that would have ensured a more equitable arrangement being made. Referring to Tatham's departure from the Colony and the sale of the business a day or two afterwards, his Lordship said it was inevitable that when this man thought he had been defrauded that he should think that he had been got-out-of-the-Colony. He did not think that Tatham had been got out of the Colony. He thought that was a stretch of imagination. On the other hand, his Lordship thought Tatham was considerably to blame, because it was his business to look after his own interests, and so far the Court could not help him. He allowed things to be perfectly clear, that if he had stopped, as Tang Kee wanted a European manager, he might have been engaged by Tang Kee. The only question was whether the state of alarm which undoubtedly Mr. Howell was in was thoroughly justified when the business was discontinued. The accounts were most extraordinary. Nobody seemed to have been able to unravel them in Court until Mr. Lowe arrived, and Mr. Lowe had certainly put them perfectly straight. He was bound to accept evidence of that sort. It was clear when they came to examine the figures that there had been a leakage and he was led to find that Mr. Howell did not attribute that in any way to Mr. Tatham. There were discrepancies in the figures which were not very clear, but the evidence was not sufficiently strong for his Lordship to pass a deliberate judgment upon them. That being so, the question was whether he could find that fraud had been proved. He could not. It was a civil case, most serious, and hence had come the rule that it must be proved to the hilt. However difficult he felt with regard to some of the items and however conscious he was that the explanation was not altogether satisfactory, yet he was bound to hold that the charge of fraud had not been proved to the hilt. Therefore judgment must be for defendant and, of course, with costs. In view of the fact that the case had been lengthened by the inadmissible acts of the defendant the only equitable order for him to make was that the judgment should be for defendant with costs, but that he must pay to the plaintiff the costs of three days of the trial, those three days not including the first.

London, March 28th.

Sir Edward Clarke, on behalf of the plaintiff, said that the married life of the de Forests had been quite happy until the Baroness met Mr. Ashton, a young officer of the Guards. At first the Baron treated the acquaintance with indifference; but he subsequently became suspicious, and eventually the Baroness admitted misconduct with Mr. Ashton. The Baron forgave her and condoned the offence.

It was alleged that the uncle had made incriminating statements to Lord Derby, Chairman of the General Fire Association at Southampton, but the plaintiff's case broke down through Lord Derby's inability to swear to having heard the incriminating words.

A verdict was then entered for the defendants.

A City Constable

Nervous Depression,
Lassitude, Rheumatism

From all lands, deputations come to study the method which has made the London Constable superior to all others. "The method by which I make myself equal to my work," says Constable Lawrence, "consists of taking Phosferine at intervals, as in this way I keep myself alert mentally and physically." Since taking Phosferine, Constable Lawrence can remain on "point" duty in all weathers, controlling the amazing volume of City traffic, without experiencing the terrible nerve strain and weariness which formerly distressed him. Even amongst men who excel, Constable Lawrence is known as an exceedingly capable officer, equal to any emergency, and he declares that Phosferine alone enables him to maintain himself in this fine condition.

Quite removed.

Constable Lawrence, 398, High Road, Tottenham, writes:—"Possibly there is not an occupation more nerve trying than that of a 'point-duty' policeman, especially when the roads are slippery and the drivers have a difficulty in holding up their horses. Add to this, the skidding of motor omnibuses and the dodging of taxi-cabs, &c., it will be seen that my duty is not a pleasant one. I am sure that no one would care to change places with us for more than a few minutes, for it would at once be felt that the dangers are too numerous to cope with. Policemen look big, strong men, but are just as likely to get run down in health as other men, and this is what happened to me sometime ago, when I suffered from headaches, nerve-depression, lassitude and rheumatic pains. After trying many remedies, I was recommended Phosferine, and can say that it is a wonderful renewer of health, and seems to put fresh life into one from the first dose. I am now quite myself again, and very thankful that Phosferine was brought to my notice."—March 5, 1910.

SCIENTIFIC MISCELLANY.

GETTING THE MOST FROM OUR RESOURCES. "Efficiency" is the watchword of the hour, and it is being applied not only to the human unit the individual specialized to fill in the most helpful manner his place in the evolving plan of Nature, but to the plant and animal, and even to the inorganic world. It has been recently estimated that the nitrogen taken from the air by electrical means will add 50 per cent. to the productivity of the soil. Recent years have shown that the earth's yield is to be further increased by such means as intelligent rotation of crops, the best use of nitrifying organisms, more attention to the action of sunlight and heat in preparing soil for seed, and a better understanding of the disinfection of soils from the plant poisons left by growing crops. Electrification of the air above plants has been found to have great influence. Sir Oliver Lodge finds that it has always existed, and he and others are endeavouring to so intensify and adapt it artificially as to get the greatest possible results in agriculture. Even more is expected from scientific breeding. Improvement of breeds of plants, and animals has become a world undertaking and the astonishing achievements already made give promise that man's wants are to be even better supplied in future, with an increase in abundance that will provide for a great increase of the world's population.

SAFETY FIRE-EXTINGUISHING. Modern industries give liability to fire where water is not only ineffective but dangerous as an extinguisher, and the use of sand is among the substitutes. The new fire apparatus of a London electric lighting station is a truck holding 600 pounds of sand and carrying a fibre bucket and a couple of spades. This equipment is specially adapted for the purpose, and is advised for motor garages, oil stores, electric theatres, etc.

AERONAUTICAL WEATHER-SERVICE. The Weather Service of Prussia is to be supplemented by a special aeronautical service. The Aeronautical Observatory at Lindenberg proposed making regular observations of upper air currents by captive balloon, and issuing an afternoon weather map.

TIDES FOR CHEAP ELECTRICITY. Looking for water-power for developing cheap electrical energy, engineers in England are beginning to turn their attention to the tides. In a paper read the other day to the Ipswich Engineering Society, W. O. Hornsby pointed out that to make tidal power profitable now there must be available a natural pond, which should be free from use for navigation, must require only a short dam to close it to the sea, and should have a minimum tidal range of at least ten feet. Such conditions may be found along the Essex coast and similar low-lying shores with moderate tides. Some use of tidal power has been made for hundreds of years, corn having been ground by it in the eleventh century, but the early method was the turning of a wheel by the current flowing back and forth in a natural channel. For this inefficient plan the storage of water during the rise of the tide and its use as a considerable fall only during the outward flow has been substituted. A tide mill at Woodbridge, still regularly grinding corn, has a shallow pond of 10,000 square feet, with a tide range of 10½ to 13½ feet, and the wheel is worked with a fall of 5 feet, continuing 4½ to 5½ hours at each tide. The undershot wheel, 14 feet in diameter and 6 feet wide, develops 10 or 12 horse-power at 6 revolutions a minute. The tide mill at St. Osyth had a pond of 1,120,000 square feet, and used two wheels, each 18 feet in diameter by 6 feet wide, and credited with 20 horse-power.

SOIL MOISTURE NECESSARY. Each kind of soil is found by A. Muntz to have a definite moisture limit, below which seeds actually dry up instead of gaining. In a sandy soil, 0.5 per cent. of water is sufficient for germination, with loams the required percentage is from 2.5 to 7.7 according as the proportion of clay increases; and with garden soil, containing a large proportion of humus, nearly 19 per cent. of water must be present before germination can take place.

A PHOSPHORESCENT ELECTRIC LAMP. A newly patented British lamp is a Geissler tube, coated on the inside with phosphorescent sulphides, and filled with helium or other rarefied gas. The passage of an electric current through the tube excites the phosphorescent lining, producing a brilliant and economical white light.

UNALTERED STERILIZED MILK. A solution of the problem of sterilizing milk without altering its ferments is claimed by a Russian chemist. When the sterilization is brought about by boiling water temperature, the milk is rendered inert by the decomposition of its albuminoid bodies and their salt, and feeding infants with such milk is regarded as the cause of many deaths. Heating even to 62 deg. C. if continued several minutes, destroys the ferments and antitoxins. It is found, however, that heating to 72 deg. to 80 deg. C. will give complete sterilization in a few seconds, and that in this short time the milk itself is not altered. To effect this heating, the milk is broken up into fine globules by forcing it into a sterilized vessel by a spray of steam or compressed air. It is at once condensed, and is allowed to drop into a receiver, where it is cooled. The germ-destroying action on the sprayed drops is rapid and energetic. The air spray has no other effect whatever, but with steam spray the milk becomes dilute about 10 to 15 per cent.

A LIGHTED LIFE-PRESERVER. An electrically lighted life-buoy has been brought out by an English firm for use in places where workers are exposed to the risk of drowning, as in docks and on shipboard. It carries two 9 candle-power electric lamps about

BAD LIVERS.

Not only is the Liver the largest but one of the most important organs in the human body, and when deranged it becomes the source of endless suffering. When the Liver is clogged by the inactivity of the kidneys and bowels, it becomes torpid, and fails to filter the bile from the blood, thus producing biliousness and a general impairment of the digestive system. The tongue is coated, the head aches, digestion is imperfect; there is aching of the limbs and back, feelings of fullness, weight and soreness over the stomach and liver; the eye becomes yellow and jaundiced and the complexion muddy, the urine is scanty and highly coloured, and the bowels irregular, constipation and looseness alternating. There is little use treating the liver separately, as it can never be set right until the kidneys and bowels are made active in removing the waste from the body. It is for this very reason that Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills have always proved so wonderfully successful in curing the most chronic Liver complaint, biliousness and complicated ailments of the kidneys, liver, and bowels. They reach the liver as no other remedy does.

They are a perfect Blood Purifier and a positive and permanent cure for Biliousness, Indigestion, Constipation, Headaches, Sallow Complexion, Liver and Kidney Troubles, Piles, Pimples, Boils and Blotches, and for Female Ailments.

the water and two below the surface, and in clear weather the light from these is visible to a considerable distance. The two primary batteries feeding the lamps are sealed in the buoy is lifted from its rack. This action automatically lights the lamps, and they continue illuminated for three or four hours. The weight of the buoy is but 25 pounds. In the tests made, a man of average weight was carried by the buoy while lying across, and three men kept their heads up by its means when their bodies were submerged.

TO LESSEN SMOKE. Concentrating in a few central stations the burning of all coal used for electric power is the remedy of C.H. Merz for reducing London's smoke. These large stations, with tall chimneys, would effectively consume the fuel, and would give an estimated annual saving of 6,000,000 tons of coal. By using the electric current for cooking and other domestic purposes as well as lighting, smoke would be still further lessened.

REVIEW.

The Diseases of China. By W. HAMILTON JEFFERYS, M.D., and I. L. Maxwell, M.D., F.R.C.P. Philadelphia: Blakiston.

This literature of Tropical Diseases is growing with a rapidity which almost makes one despair of being able to overtake it. The field is so wide and so profitable, the workers so numerous and so enthusiastic that we cannot wonder at the, literally, tremendous output, even if we have to qualify that wonder by the satisfaction that so much of it is ephemeral. And unfortunately no country has a monopoly of diseases, whether that country be in the tropical zone or in the temperate zone—diseases present in one part of a particular zone can generally be found in distant parts East or West of that zone. Careful enquiry has shown diseases present in a country which was at one time thought to be free of them—for instance, lately, Yellow Fever was found to be endemic in the West Coast of Africa, though not recognised as such, apparently masquerading under other names. And in these days of travel and commerce diseases are carried from their home, and find a new home in other countries. Witness, the way Plague came out of Yunnan, tarried awhile among us, and has now taken up its home in India. So that the cult of Tropical Diseases, is important and should be widespread, for they are apt to seek fresh lands and come within the ken of the everyday medical practitioner in some shape of their history, and who goeth into the uttermost parts of the earth if he be a careful investigator will find his labour rewarded. The instruction given now-a-days in the Schools of Tropical Medicine ought to fit a man to conduct a certain amount of research and investigation if he were not unduly hampered, and a book like the one before us, "The Diseases of China," should undoubtedly be a wide medium of such assistance and benefit to the medical man who carries on his work in the Middle Kingdom. The work is got up in handsome and attractive form and is a monument to the industry and conscientious work of the authors, who have set a pattern to medical men working in tropical fields. Naturally this book is not expected to take the place of the established text books of Tropical Diseases; it is rather a summary of the diseases which are prevalent in these latitudes, and consequently the authors merely sketch them, leaving the fuller and more detailed description to the recognised text books.

The opening chapter deals with modern scientific practice in China and contrasts it with the old empirical practice. "The successful practitioners are those who give the best practice, by which we mean the fullest equipment of scientific training and skill, devoted, with courage and tenderness, not ultimately to the making of an exact terminological diagnosis, but to the relief and cure of the man." This is the text of the authors, and that it is the guiding principle of medical men is proved by the yearly increasing number of natives who seek the benefits of Western medicine of treatment. A Nosography of the diseases of China forms an interesting chapter, giving the various diseases which are found in this vast country, which bears out our contention that all countries have most diseases in common, though the authors declare that they "believe the future holds out along these lines some tremendously interesting fields for observation and the basis of studies which will prove themselves of inestimable value to the human race"—which indeed may be said of the study of diseases in every clime.

A large part of the book is taken up with a description of various general diseases, sketched but succinct and accurate. An interesting chapter is devoted to the opium habit—the habit which in the opinion of the late Dr. Ayres, the Colonial Surgeon here, is "perfectly harmless in itself," but which a number of fanatics and extremists have endowed with every possible harm and danger. There is no doubt that in excess it causes derangement of the digestive functions and consequent emaciation and debility which may act as predisposing causes of disease, but that is only when it is taken in excess. It is difficult to see what harm is done by the small doses generally consumed which soothe the mind and ease the resting hours of the hard toiler, and give him that mental satisfaction that other nations seek in alcohol with such disastrous results. The prohibition of opium will drive the native to alcohol and will create a worse economic condition. In Hongkong, if report be believed, indulgence in alcohol is becoming more widespread among the Chinese, and we shall have an instructive object lesson of the results of enforcing a code of morality by legal measures.

The volume concludes with an interesting chapter on Hospital construction in China, illustrated by plans, and an appendix on Laboratory methods—both of them will be of much use. The illustrations are numerous and clear, the microphotographs of parasites are quite new, and are the work of Dr. Bell, of Hongkong, and Fleet Surgeon Saito, R.N., and reflect credit on them.

To the practitioner in China this book will undoubtedly be of much benefit and assistance, especially if he is stationed in distant and remote parts, for it brings within convenient compass an account of recent work in tropical pathology.

SCALP SPECIALISTS USE AND RECOMMEND NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE

"I am sending you my photograph to show what Newbro's Herpicide has done for me. Since I first tried Herpicide upon my hair I have used it exclusively in giving scalp treatments to others, and I would not think of trying to get along without it." (Signed) MRS. ANNA CONNER. 2807 Archer Ave., (Chicago, Ill.)

Hundreds of Lady scalp specialists and hair dressers use and recommend Newbro's Herpicide, instead of products of their own manufacture upon which a much larger profit could be made. They claim that Herpicide makes friends for them and gives much better satisfaction. Some hair dressers use Herpicide for obstinate cases only, but why not use the best first?

Herpicide is a delightful dressing that can be used when there is no disease of the hair or scalp, and as an actual remedy for dandruff, itching scalp and falling hair it stands in a class singularly its own.

Many ladies object to a gummy and sticky hair dressing, or one that is full of sedimentary chemicals intended to dye the hair. The marked preference for a clean and dainty preparation, particularly one that overcomes excessive oiliness and leaves the hair light and fluffy, is reflected in the enormous sale of Newbro's Herpicide. Discriminating ladies become enthusiastic over its refreshing quality and exquisite fragrance. It stops itching of the scalp almost instantly.

UENA, THE GEISHA A QUEEN, OR THE PLAY-GROUND OF PASSION

By CHARLES J. H. HALCOMBE.
(Author of "The Mystic Flowery Land,"
"Children of Far Cathay," etc.)

CHAPTER XV.

THE POOL OF DESTINY.

The moon had already risen above the lofty rampart of trees which surrounded the island when the two watchers at the shrine of Prince Iyutzu heard the great bell of the monastery boom forth its warning knell; and soon afterwards they heard the tread of feet and the whispering of voices outside.

With beating heart Uena rose to her feet. Merton was standing near her and for a moment or two they stood gazing into one another's eyes as a bright beam of moonlight from an adjacent window cast its radiance upon them.

"We must be brave, dear," she whispered, holding her lips up to his as he drew her to him and caressed her with silent fervour.

"If I am taken, we shall soon meet again," she added with fatalistic resignation, giving to her speech the peculiar glamour and grandiloquence of the East. "The parting will only be for a little while and I shall await you at the Lotus Terrace of the Golden West and we shall go forward together to the next life of eternity."

"If you live taken," he responded passionately. "I do not wish to remain. Can we not both go together?"

"No, dear," she answered very tenderly and decisively. "If it is decreed that you remain, you must live on and labour, nobly fulfilling your appointed task and your appointed destiny. But in spirit, we shall always be close to one another, and you will always remember what I have said to you."

"Have no fear, my love," he answered with solemn pathos. "I shall never forget! no, never! Still, it seems hard, ah—very hard, that those who really love one another, and those who are striving to live a good life, should be so beset with sorrow."

She looked into his eyes and, being strong in her faith, smiled with meek submission.

"These sorrows," she said gently, "are but hidden blessings. For those whom God loves he chastens with many burdens—burdens which make us feel all the more light and gladness when they are at length removed from us, as by a merciful Providence who knows just what weight we can bear. No burden is ever imposed without a good purpose."

They now heard someone enter the building. Looking round, they saw the tall and venerable form of the High Priest coming towards them, as they went to meet him. Without speaking, he stopped on to Merton and placed upon him a long white robe of soft linen. Then motioning them to follow him, he led the way outside, where the priests had formed themselves into two long lines between which they passed, still preceded by the old man who looked very stately in his rich vestments of silk.

Then the procession slowly wended its way in a northerly direction through the grounds and finally entered a grove of trees which opened into a garden of dark and lofty wall of pines and cryptomerias.

Leaving the procession behind in the grove, the High Priest conducted Uena and Merton across the moonlit glade to a small pool of water at the side of which was a finely sculptured marble obelisk having an arched recess which contained a bench only broad enough to seat two persons. Above this was a closed niche which the old man now opened, taking from it two small goblets of chased silver. Into one he poured a clear effervescent fluid from a phial he had brought with him.

He motioned them to seat themselves in the recess, which they did. Now taking a goblet in each hand he held them up and looking heavenward murmured an invocation and then handed them to Uena and Merton.

"Drink, my children, drink," he said in a low impressive voice, "and may all be well with you."

Uena's lips moved as if in prayer as she received the cup, which she drained to the dregs.

With his mind full of vague fear and wonderment, Merton drank the sparkling draught, which was as clear as crystal but had a slightly aromatic flavour.

The High Priest received the empty vessels, and placing them back in the niche walked slowly round to the opposite side of the pool and again turned towards them and knelt with his head bowed and his hands clasped in front of him.

Uena drew closer to Merton and slipped her hand into his.

"Hold it tightly," she whispered. "Don't let go!"

He felt her warm delicate hand tremble as he grasped it firmly and gazed from her to the gleaming surface of the pool, round the side of which the water appeared to swirl and bubble, which the centre looked as if it were a mirror.

From the darkness of the neighbouring grove came a glimpse of white garments; but no sound could be heard and no movement could be seen, and nothing broke the dead stillness of the night.

Suddenly Merton felt a dank icy breath upon his cheek, and the boring silence seemed overshadowed by some ghostly presence. He involuntarily shuddered and felt a responsive tremor pass through his companion.

He glanced at her and noticed that she was leaning back quiescently with her hands wide open and looking fixedly in front of her, and that a tenuous vapour of a violet-grey colour hovered above her head. Still her breast was gently heaving and her body was warm with the glow of life, so he manfully struggled against his fears.

After a time, however, his limbs began to feel numb and powerless, yet with the cessation of physical power there was a corresponding increase of mental activity; and, as his senses were quickened into greater perceptivity of some mysterious force within him, he saw strange shapes gliding menacingly through the air and writhing about near the ground, while from their midst fierce luminous faces glared at him with future watchfulness.

He nerved himself and made an attempt to rise and shake off the spell; but he was unable to move, and his grasp again tightened upon the hand he held.

Then only vaguely conscious that such was the case, this heightened his growing apprehension, and intensified the loneliness which oppressed him.

These spectral visions became more and more distinct until they terrified him; and in order to escape from the sight of them he rivetted his gaze upon the gleaming pool at his feet. But as he did so a shadowy black mist seemed to rise from its depths and take human shape; and as the outlines became more definite he saw the form of a woman, and her arms were extended as though they would embrace him. The face was strangely beautiful and he could not remove his gaze from it, yet the eyes were inhumanly large and bright, and while alluring him down fascinated him with horror. His blood tingled in his veins and a prickly sensation crept up his spine to the base of his head.

Thrilled into the wild and unaccountable desire to plunge forward against his will into the misty darkness, he feverishly clutched the hand he held, as if seeking support in a desperate effort to resist the impulse. The hand was icy cold and chilled him to the very bones.

The thought that Uena was dead slowly dawned upon him, yet he could not remove his eyes from the fair and awful shape before him. The sweat oozed from his brow as he looked upon it, against his own inclination, leaped forward over the pool, at the same time tremblingly drawing Uena's cold hand into the warmth of his breast. Was she dead? At first his mind was only able to feebly grasp the idea; but, as it grew upon him, those gleaming eyes gradually lost their dead lustre and the haunting face which rose up from the waters slowly melted into the mist from which it emanated, though the living arms were still thrust out in a last frantic endeavour to draw him down to within their reach. But as his fear for Uena overcame all thoughts of himself and his peril, the rest of the ghostly body shivered into shapelessness and mingling with the elements faded from view; and once more the pool shone bright and unclouded, though its slowly-dying waters appeared to have risen and swollen until they almost licked his feet.

Was Uena really dead? The idea paralyzed him and the suspense became intolerable, and he forgot all else save the one terrible fear—the fear that he whom he loved dearer than his own life had been snatched from him into that unknown land of shadows upon the brink of which he had just stood.

A deathly pallor was on her face; her eyes were fixed in a vacant stare, and her body was quite inanimate, though an aura of pale blue light appeared to radiate from it. He held the cold hand to his lips, and while breathing upon it gently chafed the lifeless arm. In the meantime he glanced fearfully around and still saw serious vapours writhing about through the calm air and close to the Earth, but the moonlight gleamed threateningly and their sinister faces had vanished. Moreover, the consciousness of an overwhelming presence no longer disturbed his mind, and the waters of the pool gradually subsided until they seemed as smooth and placid as a sheet of ice.

Suddenly the priest raised his head and looked towards Uena. His movement again recalled Merton to his senses and he noticed that the hand he held was getting warm and he felt the tingle of blood coursing through its veins. Uena's bosom heaved with a sigh and the long velvety lashes of her eyes fluttered languidly.

"Uena! Uena!" he cried with passionate joy. "Thank God! you are alive!"

She returned the pressure of his hand, and a shuddering tremor passed through her frame, shaking it from head to foot. Then rousing herself she gazed towards the priest. The old man at once stood up and looking heavenward murmured a prayer. Then he beckoned them to him.

"Come hither, my children," he said in a cheerful voice. "The ordeal is over and the Great Tribunal has adjudged you guiltless and has spared your lives and linked your destinies for good."

Merton assisted Uena to her feet, and they walked together to where the High Priest stood. He silently blessed them and then led the way back into the grove, where the priests again formed up behind them as they passed between their lines.

They now returned to the Hall of Judgment, which was dimly lighted; and as the High Priest and the rest of the elders ascended the tribunal Uena and Merton took up a position as before, and the other priests went to their places on either side of the hall.

"My children," said the old man, his voice quivering with emotion, "you are now free, and to-morrow morning you will depart from us and I shall give instructions for my own vessel to be prepared to convey you to your port of destination in the Indian Sea. Yet it is my bounden duty to uphold the strict rules of this monastic community by impressing upon you the fact that neither of you must return to this island during your earthly lifetime unless it be for the purpose of conducting an interment."

"We shall now regard you, Mr. Merton, as a lay brother of ours, and through your union with Uena you have a right to wear the robe you now wear. It is to be barred with her in the shrine of her illustrious father. Do you desire to avail yourself of this privilege?"

"I do, sir," answered Merton. "I desire to end my days with her and to eventually rest with her."

"And now, my children," concluded the good old man, "I will leave you to yourselves for a while, though I hope to see you both again before your departure."

At this juncture Kaisha came forward and knelt before the High Priest.

"O, my father," he pleaded, bowing his head to the ground, "permit me to follow our sister Uena and serve her as before. I will serve them both, and be also faithful to you."

The High Priest smiled in a kindly manner and looked towards the two lovers.

"Am I to grant this petition?"

They gladly gave consent.

"Then, Kaisha," said the old man, "you are at liberty to go with them, and I feel convinced that you will do it for good. For to promote their welfare and happiness and will yet continue and labour in the good cause for which you have laboured so long and so well. From you I shall hope to hear of those whom you serve; for at the end of every year, you will return here as formerly and report yourself, and we will make arrangements for a vessel to always meet you at the port of Kokoro."

Kaisha again knelt down, and murmuring words of thanksgiving, he joyfully rejoined Uena and Merton bowed to the assembly and made their way out into the moonlit grounds.

Uena was grave and thoughtful, yet her face looked fairer than ever, for it seemed to be illuminated by a light of super-conscious intelligence.

Merton drew her arm into his and caressed her hand.

"Once more we are alone," he said gently, "and yet it has not been for this soft little hand I should not have held through the ordeal—I should have plunged into that dreadful pool. Is it deep?"

"It has never been fathomed," she replied, "and according to tradition there is an undercurrent which draws downward to some subterranean lake or river."

Then impulsively grasping his hand she fondly gazed into his face.

"And it was your dear hand, or rather the love which dwelt through it, that brought me back," she said with a wistful smile. "For, even though it were only for a little while, I doubt whether I could have come back had it not been for the quickening vitality and attraction which came from you. It shows, dear, that love—true unselfish love—is akin to life and has inconceivable power—power which can, for a time at least, stay the very hand of destiny."

"But, oh, the horror of the thing!" he exclaimed with a shudder; and he proceeded to relate to her his terrible experience at the pool.

NERVOUS DEBILITY.

ITS CAUSE AND CURE.

In consequence of the stress of modern life,
Nervous Debility is one of the most prevalent disorders of mankind.

The exhausting wear and tear of the nervous system incidental to the demands of daily life are not repaired as readily as when men lived more peacefully and had more time for the rejuvenative powers to exercise their influence on the body. The result is, we are all prone to make overdrifts on the bank of health.

To conquer this evil we need something which will restore the excess of phosphorus used up in the vital processes and supply a food which is easily digested and readily assimilated, for the fired body has not the nervous force necessary to digest the heavy foods most of us have to eat.

The preparation which supplies these essential qualities in an ideal form is Sanatogen. It is universally recognized by the medical profession
as the world's greatest restorative and reconsti-tuent. The phosphorus it contains restores the feeble flame of vitality to a blaze, while the large quantity of nutritive casing of which it is likewise composed, is quickly and easily assimilated by the feeble digestive apparatus. The result is soon felt in renewed strength and vigour, both of body and mind.

Sanatogen may be obtained at all chemists.

UENA, THE GRISHA QUEEN.

THE PLAY-GROUND OF PASSION.

"Yes, it must have seemed very awful to you,"
she observed as he concluded, "but you did not actually pass out of your body: your mind merely functioned on another plane of consciousness—on the lower astral plane. You were permitted to glance behind the scenes and to behold the silent yet powerful emissaries of justice which are appointed by the high tribunal of Nature to execute its judgments upon those who wilfully or with impunity transgress its righteous laws.
Like attracts like and evil attracts evil; and by doing evil we draw to us those dark angels of retribution who are slowly working out their own redemption, and whose base instincts are wisely used as a scourge against the lawless
others in order that good may come of it.
Had you been a crafty, faithless man, I should have passed beyond the great Borderland and beyond human reach, and you would have plunged to your doom. For we would have lived upon one another's love."

"But what," said he, "was that effervescent liquid which we drank?"

"She smiled, and blushing with the memory of a bygone day spoke in a half-whisper:

"Do you remember, dear, that morning when we first met—when you came down into the garden at early dawn and spoke to me and tried to help me to gather the dew?"

"Am I likely to ever forget?" he responded with passionate ardour. "And was it really dew that we drank?"

"Not pure dew, but dew impregnated with the subtle essences of certain plants: dew which has been kept tightly sealed for some time and been frequently placed out in the open air during the hours of noon and sunset. Thus it can be used for a variety of useful purposes and as a medicine; and, when taken in larger quantities, it refines the senses and gives occult sight which otherwise could only be gained by long and arduous preparation."

"Dear me, how strange," he said wonderingly,
"but, after we had taken it, did you feel that peculiar consciousness of an unseen overshadowing presence?"

"Yes, dear," she answered, "but we will not discuss these things, for they are sacred."

"But what was it?"

"It was the angel of my destiny and of your destiny, since we have linked our lives—the angel of the Valley of the Shadow."

"Which means death," he said.

"Yes, dear, but we peoples of the Far East never use that word."

"But was death so near us?"

"Yes, Guy," she said with strange tenderness, "and it is near us now, only we are permitted by a merciful Providence not to feel its menacing power."

"He regarded her with grave questioning eyes.
"Surely we shall live to enjoy a little happiness in this world? We have known so many sad and weary days."

"Oh, Guy," she said wistfully, "did you but know of the bright and beautiful days which we may hope to spend together in the ages to come—days of eternal summer and sunshine, as it were—you would fondly look forward to that time, and would surely blossom with roses which you would long to pluck. Believe me, dearest, this is but a vain little world after all, and really insignificant compared to the one which lies beyond the Valley of the Shadow."

He hung his head and smiled a dubious smile.

"Pardon me, Uena, if I cannot share your enthusiasm," he said a trifle bitterly, "but I can only hope that you are right; anyhow, you must show me the way lest I should lose it through unbelief."

They now passed along a path which led round the north side of the great staircase and emerged into the grounds which Merton had explored by himself on the previous night.

"I had no idea," he said laughing,
"that I was wooing so grand a lady as the daughter of a prince. But how came your good father to be connected with this monastery?"

"Well, dear," she replied, "it is rather a romantic little story. When my father was quite a young man he was crossing the Indian Sea when the vessel encountered a terrific hurricane,
and was wrecked upon the reef which surrounds
this island. All hands perished save himself and he contrived to swim ashore. He found that the island was covered with ancient ruins
the magnificence of which greatly impressed him, and that its only inhabitant was an aged hermit, who showed him great kindness and hospitality. This strange old man, with whom he sojourned for some time, was deeply versed in occult lore and inspired him with a noble resolve to seek the ruins of his former grandeur and to dedicate his life to the cause of religion and enlightenment."

The chief aim of my father's life was the reformation or rather regeneration of the Shinto faith, which is the oldest and really the most beautiful religion in the Far East, though during the course of years it had sadly degenerated and become a mere outward form and ceremony. Its doctrines had been perverted and its divine mysteries forgotten or misunderstood; and, as with many of the religions of the world, it was the same to him, the old light and fervour have been rekindled through the influence of this monastic seclusion."

She pointed towards the Hall of the Mirror which loomed to their left, its magnificent roof reflecting the light of the moon.

"In that silent Hall of the Mirror, or orb-reflecting pool, men when they first come here prepare themselves for the advanced courses of this logical instruction by ridding themselves of earthly passions and desires. This is achieved through self-induced trance, self-hypnotic suggestion—by firmly imprinting upon the objective and then subjective mind high ideals and noble resolutions which afterwards influence their lives for the good. What had those beautiful exertions degenerated into?
—into the hanging of mirrors outside the doors of Shinto temples."

"Yes, I have noticed that," said Merton, "but what is taught in the Hall of Learning? Last night I saw a number of priests sitting in silence there with their heads bowed."

"The Hall of Learning," she said, "was, I believe, originally instituted for carrying out the great work for which we were really created—for the individualizing of the soul. In that ancient building the advanced students go through long and arduous breathing exercises for the refining of the senses. Through these exercises and continuous concentration of the mind, they hope to attain to perfect superconsciousness when the mind and soul are re-embedded or made one."

"These mysteries," she continued, "may seem very strange and incomprehensible to you, but I can assure you that they are pregnant with the very essence of life and divinity. My dear father wondered at first and was very sceptical, but travelled far and wide and sought the wise men of the East; and he not only learned their languages but lived in their religious beliefs and into their sacred books, and at length there came to him a glimmering of the True Light.
Then returning to his native land, he journeyed from place to place and temple to temple; and

"IT IS A FINE THING TO FEEL PERFECTLY WELL."

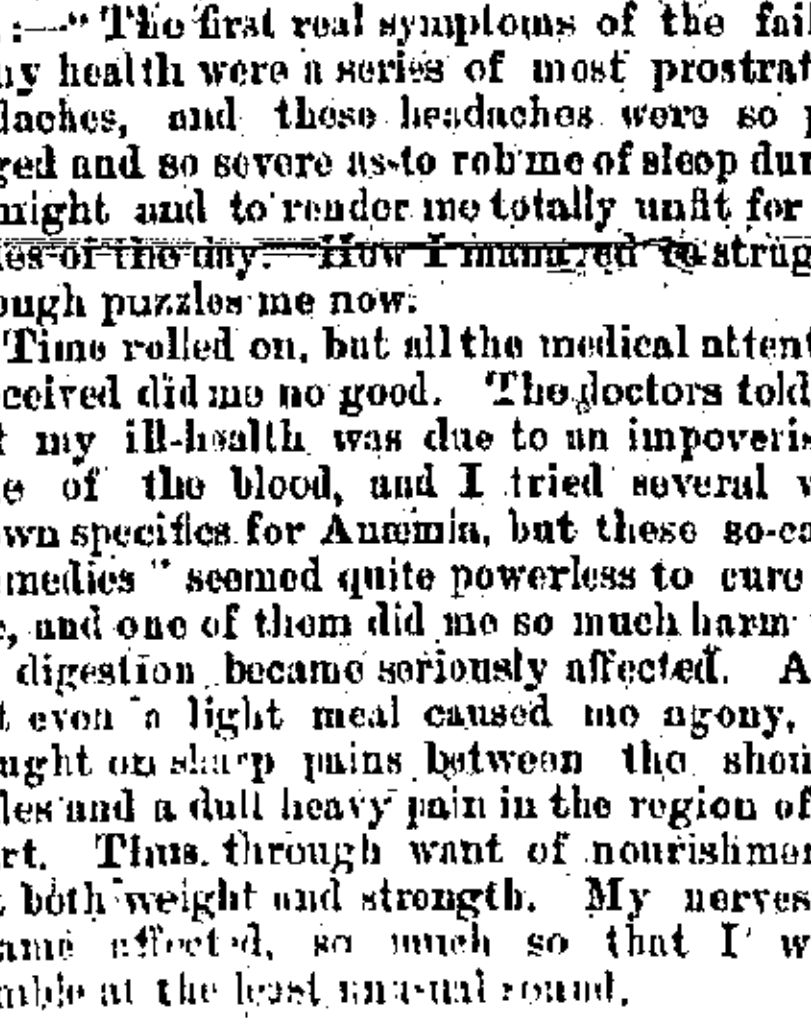

THE THANKFUL WORDS OF A RETIRED
HOSPITAL MATRON IN BURMA, CURED
AFTER EIGHT YEARS SUFFERING FROM ANEMIA, HEADACHES
AND STOMACH DIS-ORDERS BY DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS.

Herself formerly a hospital nurse, Mrs. Ruth Niedermeyer has seen much of sickness and suffering; it is to the arduous and responsible duties which she had to perform as Matron of the Moulmein Hospital some nine years ago that she attributes the breakdown of her own health.

Interviewed recently at her home, 18, Strand
Road, Moulmein, Burma, Mrs. Niedermeyer
said:—"The first real symptoms of the failure in my health were a series of most prostrating headaches, and these headaches were so prolonged and so severe as to rob me of sleep during the night and to render me totally unfit for the duties of my day."

"How I managed to struggle through puzzles me now."

"I feared not at all the medical attention
I received did me no good. The doctors told me that my ill-health was due to an impoverished state of the blood, and I tried several well-known specifics for Anemia, but these so-called remedies seemed quite powerless to cure my case, and one of them did me so much harm that my digestion became seriously affected. After that even a light meal caused me agony, and brought on sharp pains between the shoulder blades and a dull heavy pain in the region of my head. Thus, through want of nourishment, I lost both weight and strength. My nerves too became affected, so much so that I would tremble at the least unusual sound."

"For eight years I existed in this wretched way; my face became an unhealthy greenish hue, my eyes were heavy and dull, and my ankles swelled to such a degree that it became difficult for me to walk."

"Through reading in the newspapers the statement of several ladies who had been cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People of ailments similar to my own I was prompted to give these Pills a trial. And right glad I am now that I did so, for after only a few bottles
the headaches ceased and I found my appetite increasing every day. My spirits returned, my nerves became toned up, I felt a new energy, and began to take food with enjoyment once more, deriving nourishment from all I ate. Dr.
Williams' Pink Pills ultimately completely cured me and I now feel well and happy."

"It is a fine thing to feel well—perfectly well,
I mean—and I am sure that if all my women would only give these Pills a trial, not only all of their trials would be over. I know something about medicines, and from my own experience and the experience of others who have taken them on my recommendation, I am convinced that for those ailments from which so many of my sex suffer the remedy to be relied upon is undoubtedly Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

By purifying and strengthening the blood,
and by making new, rich, red blood at every dose, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have cured tens of thousands of cases similar to that of Mrs.
Niedermeyer in all parts of the world. They are renowned as the most successful remedy for Anemia, Nervous Debility, Indigestion,
Liver Disorder, Malaria, Rheumatism, Sciatica, Paralysis, Beri-Beri, Skin Complaints, and the special ailments which only afflict women.

Remember when purchasing medicine vendors that the Pills that cure are Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and resolutely refuse all substitutes or imitations. Also obtainable direct from the China Office of the Dr.
Williams' Medicine Co., 64, Seaborn Road, Shanghai, 1 bottle for $1.50, or 6 bottles for $8, post free.

having gathered around him a select band of pious and learned men, he began the great work of reformation; first restoring these archaic buildings and re-opening the seminary."

"He knew that such radical reforms would meet with strenuous opposition from the State,
if made known, so the movement was kept secret
and the old exclusive rules of the monastery were adhered to, no one being allowed to visit the island except those who were of the sacred brotherhood or those who were specially chosen from various temples to undergo a course of religious instruction."

"Your father was a good man," said Merton as she concluded her story, "and you have been a worthy and exemplary daughter. But now, dear, I want you to be a little worldly for once in your life and to talk of worldly matters which are of some moment to me. For after we are married I shall take you back to China with me and you will be the queen of my heart and the ruler of my household. I am afraid, though, that you will pine after your own people and your own country, won't you, dear?"

"Ah, my love," he murmured with tender-emotion, looking eagerly into his face, "you do not know me—no, not even now. Your words will lay waste to the world as I would. My feet will easily fall into the footstep of your feet
and my heart into the holdings of your heart."

"Bless you, my love, for those dear words," he exclaimed, pausing—gently caressing her upon the brow.

Then they walked on together through the moonlight, with their arms interlinked, and their hearts full to overflowing of love's great contentment. But their conversation has never been recorded and will now never be known.

At length they returned to the eastern side of the island, where they were met by Kaisha, whose face was simply beaming with gratification at the prospect of leaving with them on the morrow. He bowed low, and, after thanking them for their kindness, stood aside while they parted. Then he showed Merton to the apartments which had been prepared for him in the house of the High Priest, where a substantial meal was awaiting him.

U.S.A. AND JAPAN.

SUPREMACY OF THE PACIFIC OCEAN.

Count Ernest von Reventlow, the well-known German strategic expert, is about to publish the following expression of opinion on the balance of power in the Pacific Ocean and the relations between the United States and Japan, which he thinks may indirectly be influenced by events in Mexico, says the Berlin correspondent of The Standard. He writes:

"The victory over Russia bestowed upon Japan unlimited naval supremacy in the Far East, and even weakened England's influence in Asia, notwithstanding the fact that England is Japan's ally. I recall a remark made by Admiral Dorey just after the peace negotiations had begun at Portsmouth (U.S.), to the effect that America ought to have attacked Japan at an earlier date, because she was becoming far more powerful than was compatible with the interests of the United States."

"I also recall how, after the conclusion of the peace with Russia, Japanese popular feeling was directed primarily against America. Some years later there came the tension caused by the schools controversy in California, and subsequently there were other points of dispute until the voyage of the American fleet to the Pacific Ocean temporarily produced immobility, and led to the status quo agreement for the Pacific Ocean and its coasts. Japan was at the same time hard at work rebuilding and modernizing her navy, and she was also short of money. In one word, Japan was not ready for war."

Last year brought an event of great political importance in the unsuccessful action of the United States Secretary of State, Mr. Philander C. Knox, who failed to achieve his plan of neutralizing the Manchurian Railway. The agreement between Russia and Japan was the result of his action, and I am inclined to think that the treaty included between St. Petersburg and Tokyo contained clauses never yet published. On the part of America, a fervent desire to fortify the Panama Canal has been evident."

"It may well be asked why are all these preparations necessary, because Japan and America could very well live side by side in perfect peace. This is true, and yet not true. Just as the leading Japanese statesmen have realized during recent years that supremacy in the waters of the Far East is a life necessity to their country, so they are now convinced that Japan, as a great Power, cannot continue to exist unless she possesses the absolute naval supremacy in the Pacific Ocean. This statement may appear exaggerated, and therefore I will elaborate my argument in detail."

PACIFIC SUPREMACY.

"The desire to be supreme in the Pacific Ocean is a logical result of Japan's efforts to command the Chinese market. It is well known that for more than ten years, and particularly under President Taft and Mr. Knox, America has attempted all possible means to achieve the commercial conquest of the Chinese market, and for this reason to bring about close political relations with China. One of the objects of the Panama Canal is also the conquest of the Chinese market by creating a shorter way of communication between America's Atlantic ports and the Chinese coast."

"For Japan it is a vital necessity to retain the Chinese markets for her own products. Japan's geographical position close to the Asiatic Continent gives her a natural advantage over other countries, but she does not possess the enormous financial resources, nor, at present, the technical and commercial efficiency of the Americans. It must also be remembered that the Philippines appear suitable for creating an American commercial base not far from the coast of China, whereby the advantages of Japan's geographical position would be counteracted. There is also the possibility that the Philippines may be transformed into an extremely powerful American naval base."

"The Japanese know very well that the United States possesses the financial means to expand the American navy to any extent, and that Japan cannot hope to compete in respect to expenditure. It is therefore all the more important for Japan to deprive America of her bases in the Pacific Ocean before the American fleet grows to such an extent that its superiority to the Japanese navy is overwhelming. Apart from the Philippines, I refer in this connection to the Hawaiian Islands, which occupy a commanding strategic position in the centre of the Pacific Ocean, and also to the American Samoa Islands and to the island of Guam in the Mariana Group."

HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

"With regard to the Hawaiian Islands, it is often forgotten that Japan protested against their annexation by America in 1898, and that the Japanese Government has never withdrawn this formal protest. Japan was not then in a position to prevent the annexation, but since that time Japanese emigration has been systematically directed towards the Hawaiian Islands. To-day there are approximately 65,000 Japanese in the islands, and for some unaccountable reason only about 1,000 American troops. It has been ascertained that at regular intervals these Japanese residents in these islands, who are too old for military service return to their own country and are replaced by younger men capable of bearing arms."

"Taking this fact into consideration we must admit the accuracy of General Homer Lea's statement that the Japanese are in a position to conquer the Hawaiian Islands from within. It is true that there has been talk of fortification plans, especially for Pearl Harbor, but so far practically nothing has been done, and the erection of fortifications require more time than the construction of half a dozen battleships. In the same way America has neglected the fortification of the port of Guam, of Tutuila, and also of the ports and more strategic points on the American Pacific Coast, including the south-western coast of Alaska and the peninsula which projects itself into the Gulf of the Aleutian Islands."

"Leaving the American coast out of consideration, it is clear that Japan, by seizing all the strategically important islands belonging to the United States in the Pacific Ocean, could create a permanent and unalterable advantage for herself."
